INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

ECONOMICS - MANAGEMENT

INTERNATIONAL AT THE HEART OF OUR STRATEGY

“ In order to contribute to the establishment of structuring international collaborations, our school has made the development and influence of its international relations one of its priorities. This is apparent in the training, research and innovation we provide and is for the benefit of students, staff, teachers, researchers and local business community.

On the one hand, this strategy involves supporting individual initiatives which traditionally form the basis of international relations. On the other hand, our graduate school participates in major international cooperation programmes such as the Ulysseus European University, an initiative that won a call for tenders from the European Commission.

Our first and foremost objective remains the service we provide to our users. The excellence of the welcome and support, whether educational, linguistic or simply human, are expectations that we must honour. This is why we have a dedicated international relations department, with staff specifically responsible for monitoring student mobility, so that we can guarantee them individual monitoring and assistance. In addition to this support, we wish to actively promote international exchanges, so that a wider and more diverse public can benefit from the opportunity to study or work abroad, thus contributing to the development and fulfilment of our students and staff.

The graduate school aims to promote a model of university that is inclusive and open to the world. We want to facilitate access to academic excellence for as many people as possible while remaining cognisant of the needs of students and the job markets. In this way, we contribute to the construction of the European Higher Education and Research Area and to the education of tomorrow's European citizens.
